DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

---

The house on the corner (southwest) of George and Fourth Streets has been so altered as to retain only a portion of the outside form of the structure.

It is not unlike the Ellwood house on Bohemia Avenue which is three bays wide, and two storys tall and with a bay window on one gable. Only the position of the door and bay window are different in this house.

The walls throughout are covered with yellow aluminum siding and the windows have 1/1 sash and black aluminum louvered shutters. There is a porch across the east facade which has a short concrete block wall above the concrete porch. The hip roof is supported by only two square posts. Both porch and principal roofs are covered with light grey asphalt shingle. A brick chimney painted red pierces the north gable.

The rear was originally a two story, four bay long extension, however, a third story was added atop the rear room. On the south side in place of the former narrow porch is a wide enclosed leanto having sliding glass doors on its street facade.

One remaining feature of antiquity about the property is a white picket fence along the sidewalk.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Thomas Conrey probably built this house soon after 1854, when he leased the land from Richard H. Bayard. There have been many structural changes to the original house to give the owners more living space. An early map of Chesapeake City, Martinet's Map of 1858, shows this part of town to be near woodland to the south and west. The Bayard estate owned most of the land bordering on the town to the west and south.
